Individual Life Assurance Solutions

Family Protection

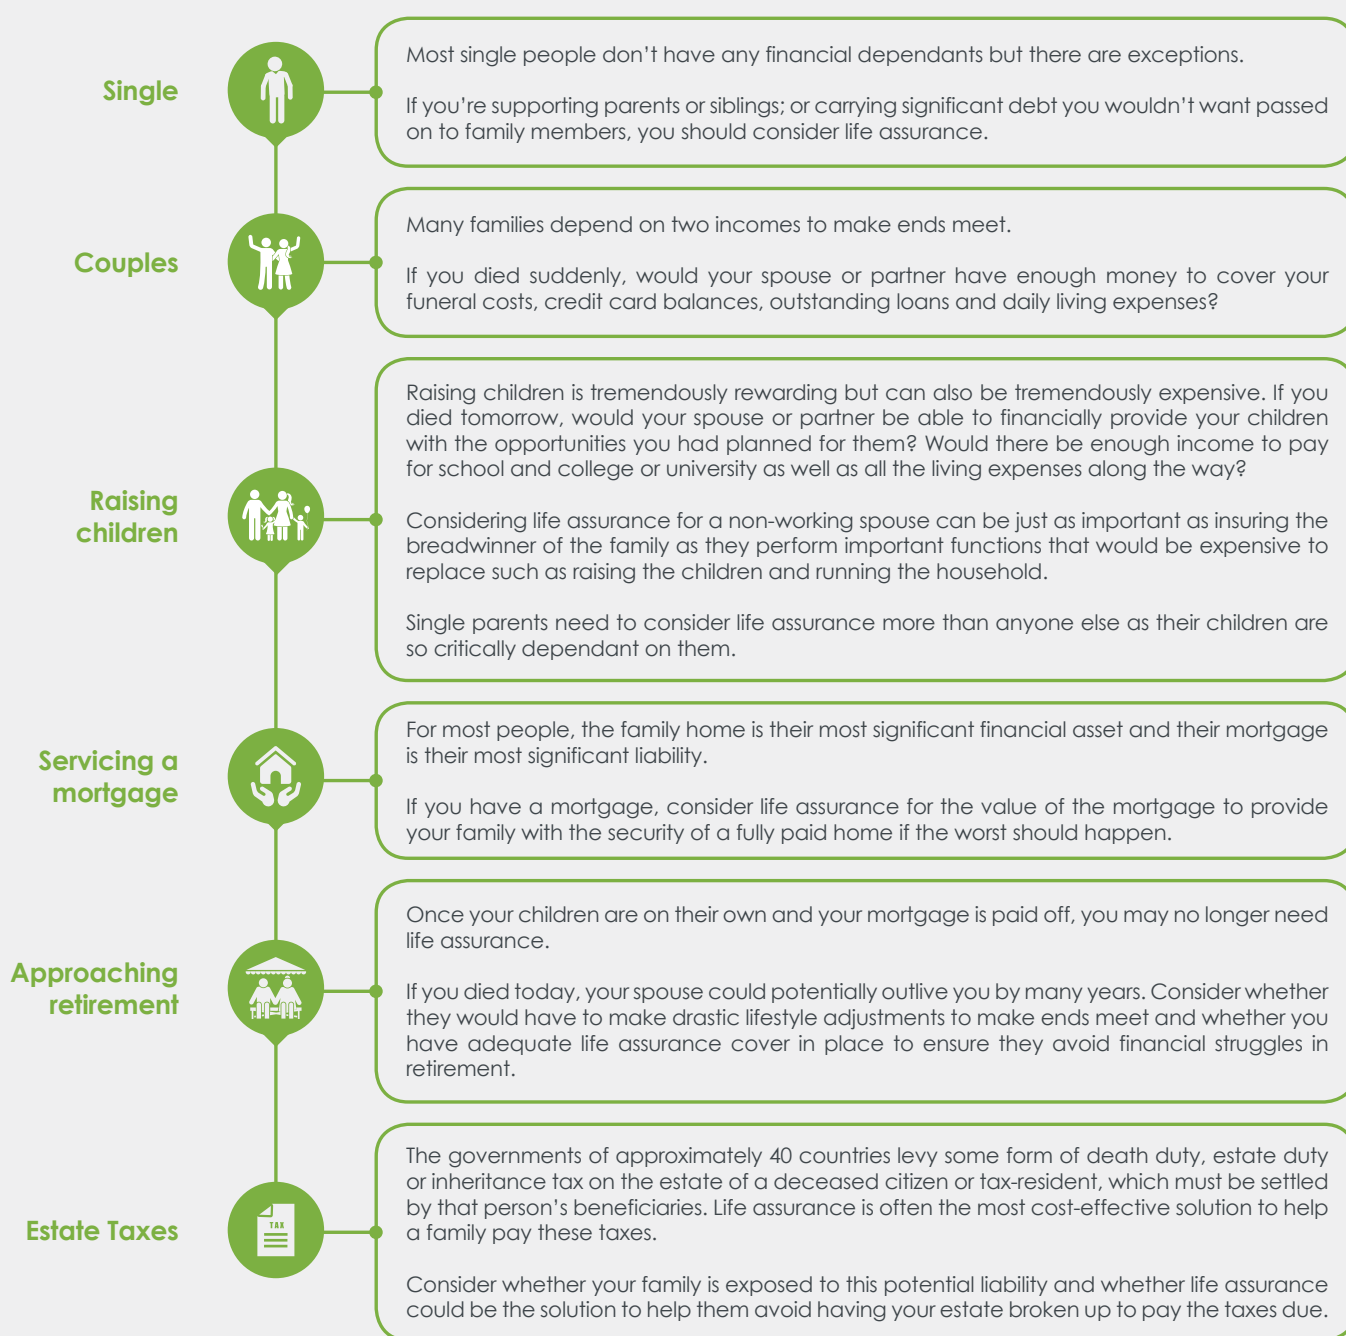

Life assurance can be a simple answer to a very difficult question, "How will my family be affected financially when I die?" This is a subject none of us really want to think about, but if we have someone financially dependent on us, it's one we really can't avoid.

The purpose of life assurance is to pay a lump sum benefit after you die, providing your loved ones with financial security should the unthinkable happen. Life assurance can pay for your family's ongoing living costs, to settle estate taxes, mortgages or other outstanding loans, to cover the remaining cost of your children's education or any number of other essential expenses.

Whether you have already established a solid financial base for your family – a home, savings and investments – or you are just starting out as a new family with all these goals in mind, life assurance is the foundation upon which it all rests. Having this foundation can protect your family from having to make drastic lifestyle changes or future plans if you were to die suddenly.

Protecting your family through the different stages of your life

As we progress through life, we may need life assurance to address the changing risks our families may face. Here are some examples of when life assurance may be important or necessary.

This document is intended to provide an overview of our Individual Life Assurance solutions for information purposes only. It does not constitute financial or insurance advice. The terms governing any policy in force are defined by the Terms and Conditions of that policy and not by any information included in this document.

We cannot issue a policy for anyone who is currently residing in the United States of America or any Mauritian National who is currently residing in the Republic of Mauritius.

How much cover do you need?

The most important (and possibly difficult) part of buying life assurance cover is determining exactly how much cover you need. As each person has different goals, financial and personal circumstances, there is no general standard for how much each person should buy. We suggest you consult with your financial adviser or insurance broker and review your personal and family circumstances described earlier.

Here are some points to consider as you go through this process.

Estimate, if you were to die today, what your family would need to meet immediate, ongoing, and future financial obligations (see below for some examples).

Immediate Cash Needs

Funeral Costs

Medical Expenses

Probate Fees

Legal Fees

Mortgage

Credit Card Debt

Other Loans

Estate Duties

Ongoing Cash Needs

Food

Housing

Utilities

Transport

Health care

Clothing

Insurance

Schooling

Future Cash Needs

Tertiary Education

Then consider what resources are already in place, such as your spouse's income, savings, investments and life assurance you already have. The difference between these is your current life assurance gap.

You may wish to make use of the Unilife Family Protection Calculator on our website to help you work out your potential life assurance needs.

This calculation may seem simple enough but there are many potential inputs and thinking of them all can get overwhelming.

You'll also need to consider the effects of inflation and make assumptions about what returns are likely on invested lump sums.

A financial adviser or insurance broker can assist with some of these areas.

Our Solutions at a glance

At Unilife, we understand that the financial peace of mind for our families is of paramount importance. This is why we have created a series of personal life assurance solutions to help families address many of the risks faced if a breadwinner dies suddenly and businesses protect themselves from the death of its key people.
